The Laws of New Zealand

The Laws of New Zealand title “Aviation Law” has been reissued and is now available online. The title has been completely revised and updated by Rene Pergomet and Bradley Hayward and offers an authoritative overview of the principles that govern aviation law in New Zealand, not only in accordance with statutes and case law that apply domestically, but also in alignment with the relevant Treaties, Conventions, and other international instruments that provide the framework for the regulation of international civil aviation. As well as offering essential guidance on the regulation of civil aviation and the general structure of international and domestic organisations and bodies, the title also provides coverage of topics ranging from the statutory provisions and rules governing the use of aerodromes, the regulation of air operations traffic management and air space in New Zealand, to the general body of laws governing the international and non-international carriage by air of passengers and goods, aviation security, and accident management. It also contains a new section on remotely piloted aircraft systems.
